Why do people give money to churches?
1. Church donors are likely to have first hand knowledge of the work and influence of the church, and encounter favourable feedback.

2. Church donors are likely to interpret the laudable work of their church as an indication of reliability and trustworthiness. But the church must demonstrate credibility.
At least three need to be met!
Donors look for organisations with which they have a heart connection - a shared cause that makes the organisation a compelling recipient of funds.

The church has a challenge because it represents a wide range of beliefs, some of which may be unacceptable.

Core beliefs must be emphasised and accessible.

Church donors have a ‘woolly’ sense of cause!
Church donors need continual evidence that they are giving money to a financially efficient ministry.

Nobody likes to throw money away!

There is no place to hide!

Members have regular contact.

They can see what is done!

Presume that members are skeptical about the churches efficiency and demonstrate otherwise through regular financial reporting.
1. Baby Boomers want to change the world into their own image!
2. Baby Busters invest in their own quality of life.
3. 50+’s are often disillusioned - they want to leave a legacy.

People no longer give to the church simply because it is the church. The church must prove itself worthy of donations through the mark that it leaves on the world.

Tell stories of positive influence honestly, humbly and emphasise God’s blessings. Tell people what we stand for, and how we make a difference to real peoples lives.
Donors have fallen prey to the ‘crises of the day’.

People transfer their donations to the area of most need.

Don’t assume understanding.

Church fund-raising has become the art of honestly and convincingly describing the many, ongoing needs of the church in terms of the urgency of those needs.
Many people give to a church because they have received identifiable benefits from the church, or because they hope the church will provide certain benefits to them and their loved ones in the future.

Benefits

- Discovery of salvation in Christ
- Prayer for healing or comfort
- Life stability, Outlet for spiritual gifts
- Environment for personal growth

Don’t confuse these motives with unbiblical selfishness!
6 out 10 people say....

“They give to their church out of a feeling of responsibility or moral obligation to the Christian community to which they belong and their participative ministries.”

Many donors must feel a level of ownership of the ministry before they will support it financially, consequently they need a sense of ‘relationship’ with the church.
1. Personal involvement
2. Personal targeted communication
3. Personal friendship networks
4. Personal spiritual benefit
5. Mutual purpose

People must come to talk about ‘my church’ or ‘our ministry’.

5 Relationship Builders
Nearly 2/3 people find church fund raising events either unappealing or embarrassing!

Reasons:
- Predictable
- Mundane
- Routine
- Time wasting
- Feel manipulated
- Resent guilt
- Energy better used

The real benefit is in involvement and networking, not money.
People like to believe that they are altruistic. They reject projects that they may cash in on!

Most believers find bible based fund raising efforts as ‘ecclesiastical usury’ or ‘sanctified extortion’! They are either hardened or ignorant of fundamental biblical stewardship!

The boomerang effect.
It is only the rare church member who has an accurate and detailed understanding of how the church spends its money.

People contribute on the basis of trust, which is quite resilient and sustained, but once broken it is virtually irreparable!
